According to Robert Kiyosaki's Rich Dad Sales Advisor, Blair Singer, salespeople and dogs train the same way. Think about it, a dog would come up to you, drop a stick at your foot a hundred times, take any rejection in the world and would still drop the stick at your foot hoping that you'll throw it for them.

Singer uses five breeds of dogs to help identify and describe the characteristics of five distinct "breeds" of salespeople. While the analogy is a bit unconventional, the book effectively addresses the notion that there isn't an "ideal" personality to be a successful salesperson. According to the author, " The greatest single mistake that salespeople or sales managers make is believing there is one particular set of characteristics or traits that all salespeople need to have to ...
